sugar and syrup together, just as it comes from the kettle the product of Amber care was sent to the Grocer this week. This from the kettiel the product of Amber case was sent to the Grosor this week. This sample was divided and a portion furnished to each of the refiners for examination. The case was grown in Talare county, where it appears to flourish, reaching good height and yields well. The sample of molasses received was obtained in a crude way, the party furnishing it saying "the juice was boiled to obtain a certain consistency, but when poured into the can it assumed its present shape." This "shape" was strong and distinct granulation. To test the value of the product for refining parposes, we placed a small portion in the hands of an expert for polarization, and he reports that the sample submitted contained 50.5 per cent of crystalizable sugar. In view of the fact the symp after the sugar is extracted is suitable for ordinary and table use, the test is most encouraging. To enable the reader to form some idea of the value of the Sorghoun product, we make reference to the following analysis recently made for the California refinery, a copy of which they have furnished to use. The report, which is dated the 19th instant, is made on three samples from Los Angelos furnished by the refinery, and is as follows:

1 have examined the samples of sorphum faire and every with the following resolue.

But this has already been demonstrated in other portions of the country, as is tested by the Commissioner of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. in his last annual report. The operations to date are only straws, although they are significant ones. It will require expital and systematic effort to develop this, as it has to develop every other great industry. The work is not yet began, but with such evidences as are already obtainable, it seems but natural that further tests should be made. Beet sugar production struggled against obstacles in Germany and France for many years, before it was pronounced a success. The industry has overcome many and serious obstacles here and is making progress yearty; why may not Sorgium culture also show similar results. At least the indications of success warrant all reasonable experiment. -S. F. Grocer and Merchant.

An Umbrella Remance.

One day during the summer of 1819 the Duc de Berry happened to be taking a walk in Opened at their Old Stand, Paris with his wife, and they were returning towards the Elysee, when a heavy rain-shower came on. The two promenadors being unpro-sided with unbrelius, took refuge under a man with the appearance of a clerk, who had an umbrella. When the storm had somewhat abated, the Duc de Berry stepped up to the young fellow and asked wether he would Bagging and Bags. nd leading the umbrella to enable him (the duke) to take his wife home. The other was suspicious, and decadedly objected to parting with his property on any conditions. The duke persisted, but finding there was no loope of obtaining a loan of the coveted object, he COAL RAGS-A Splendid Article, and Large asked its owner whether, though not having sufficient acordidence in him to lead it, he would mind offering the lade his arm as far as her WOOL BAGGING AND SEWING TWINE. residence. The gallant young clerk willingly agreed to do so, and of the duchess and her agreed to do so, and off the duchess and her except accordingly started. The latter individual, very garraious by nature, soon opened a conservation by the query as to whether his companion fixed in the quarter they were then in. "Quite close to here" replied the duchess. "It is a spendid quarter, madam, plenty of luxnry and very comme if food, In fact it is the organic diama" quarter with nothing has Anchors & Chains Toere is some truth in that "gravely responded the duchess. "For instance," pursued the theoriser, "you will usually find viscombesses and buroones on the fourth floor, and if madam happened to be a viscontesse, I would wager that I know the floor on which she lives—the fourth that is—"

"Not low enough, sir," said the lady. "Ah, well then, madame is very likely a combesse."
"Lower still." observed his companion. "In. Lower still," observed his companion. " Indeed; madame must be a marquis them." quertied the associated check. "My floor is lower yet," replied the duchous, who had found it very difficult to avoid languing setrigist. Just at this moment they arrived at the Elysee, the guard, of course, presenting arms in due form, The proprietor of the underella felt inclined to shrink into himself, and was beginning to unier out some excest, when the ducut him short by thanking him very heartily for the service he had done her, and stating that she would not forget it.
